Several new teachers coming from CMN struggle with willingness to collaborate with other teaching professionals that can help them grow in their practice. At times, they act as if they know everything and their way is the only way.

Our graduates from CMN also struggle with professionalism in the aspects of reporting to work on time and also building interpersonal relationships with their coworkers. At times, they are not mindful of things that they post to social media which gets viewed by families and the community. They struggle with realizing how their choices outside of work can possibly spill into their professional role.
